Isabelle
Eberhardt (1877 - 1904)

A lifestyle that fascinated many

A fascinating Swiss-French desert traveler and writer whose extraordinary lifestyle was rediscovered only in the 1970s in the wake of the women's movement. She wore men's clothes, traveled the Sahara and Atlas Mountains alone, and became the first European and woman to be admitted to the Muslim brotherhood, the Qādirīya. She spent seven years in Algeria, Tunisia and Morocco, writing novels, short stories and travelogues full of color and sensuality. Her life ended tragically when she drowned in the desert sands after a flood swept away her mud hut.
